If you needed to find substance or mental health treatment services, for yourself or a loved one, would you know where to look?

Regardless of what we hope or expect, information on the internet is not always up-to-date, and it's often incomplete.

And let's be honest, it's not always easy to ask a friend or family for information like this because it's so personal.

Nearly 12,000 people sought treatment for substance use disorder in Alabama last year, but that number may have been higher if information had been more widely available and easy to use.

Thankfully, the new Connect Alabama app is now available, and everyone can use it!

But Connect Alabama isn't just a treatment finder!

You can look up information on mental health and prevention, as well as get connected to support services and there's even a locator for unused prescription drug drop-off locations in your area.

You can learn more about the Connect Alabama app at vitalalabama.com or download it from your app store.

With Connect Alabama, help is in your hands.
